Stone Type: Slate

This hotel is located in the centre of Glasgow on Argyle Street and in 2003 was voted 'Best New Hotel' in the European Hotel Design Awards. The main external façades to the hotel are treated in two materials: the large expanse of copper on one elevation and the remainder extensively clad in slate.

Stirling Stone's contract included all the slate areas: the projecting box-shaped feature in the copper clad façade, plus fascias, soffits, mullions and pilasters to the rest of the building. As part of our contract extensive stone restoration works were carried out to the existing retained red sandstone façade along Robertson Street.
